FIELD OFFICER SERVICE

building disability confidence

About The Diversity Field Officer Service

Giving your business a market advantage as a welcoming, accessible business and employer of choice

Did you know that more than 1 million Australians with disability work in a wide range and variety of industries and careers?

Too many businesses are time poor, doing more with less at the cost of quality work. There is also a perceived talent scarcity across a number of industries yet we have an under-utilised talent pool that can bring many benefits to small and large businesses alike.

Many employers and small businesses across Australia employ people who have a disability that is not always obvious or realised. Disability is just another life experience, like raising children or caring for someone close. You may not even be aware that there may be some people you already work with who manage life with some form of disability.

A lack of confidence, understanding and knowledge may be holding you back from expanding your talent pool and broadening recruitment at the cost of your business. Employees with a disability bring a new dimension and way of working: from different thinking and ways of problem solving to enriching business processes and customer service.

This is where we can help. The Diversity Field Officer Service is a free service that is focused on understanding you and your business and assisting you to build your 'disability confidence' to be welcoming, confident and accessible. Read on about how our assistance can help your business. Or ask us. Our focus is to help you build the confidence and connections so that good practice becomes...well good practice.

This Geelong focused service is completely free (absolutely no obligation) and is supported by Deakin University, the Australian Federation of Disability Organisations, Geelong Chamber of Commerce, Committee for Geelong and G21 Geelong Region Alliance as well as a number of local, state and national partners, including Helen Macpherson Smith Trust, National Disability Insurance Agency and Worksafe Victoria.
